2014 GEORGIA BIGPICTURECON COMING TO CLAYTON STATE UNIVERSITY OCT 5-6

ATLANTA, Ga., August 1, 2014 – This October, Clayton State University in Morrow will host the 2014 Georgia BigPictureCon Film and Technology Conference.

“The GABPC is a two-day educational summit for professional and emerging filmmakers and those entering the film, technology, and digital media industry in Georgia,” said founder and producer Nancy Howard.

The conference, which began in 2005, will provide opportunities for emerging filmmakers and industry technology professionals to connect with one another and participate in a variety of educational sessions. Conference participants will receive the Green Pages Resource Guide Book that will include a directory of useful local, state, and federal film and video resources targeted to the needs of emerging filmmakers, an academic planning calendar with a roster of events put on by local film, visual arts, and digital entertainment organizations, as well as free and online student resources, school info, and discounts.

In addition to educational sessions, workshops and panels, there will be opening and closing keynote sessions by nationally known industry speakers. Session topics will include screenwriting, distribution, marketing, digital content creation for mobile devices, editing, funding and budgeting, audio production and industry networking. New this year are panels on corporate production and local industry organizations. The conference also features a short film festival with cash prizes up to $250 for the three winners, and an Audience Choice winner. Entry deadlines and submission details are available here.

The speakers list is still being assembled, but previous keynote speakers have included Cory Edwards, director of the acclaimed animated film Hoodwinked!; Chris Moore, producer of the award-winning Good Will Hunting as well as American Pie and Project Sunlight; and Myrna Moore, producer and host of TBS Storyline. Session speakers have included Kaneva Entertainment President and CEO Chris Klaus, award-winning director and actor Ken Feinberg, producer Dianne Ashford, Chris Escobar of the Atlanta Film Festival, and a host of other local industry professionals sharing knowledge and access to inform eager attendees.
